Narrative Podcast script

Title of the podcast: "There is just no telling how far I will go: Navigating the uncertainties of life after graduation"

Intro Narration	Deciding to attend university is a significant choice, but choosing which university to attend and what to study can be even more challenging. However, one of the biggest challenges comes after graduation: figuring out what to do with your degree. Welcome to "There's Just No Telling How Far I Will Go," where we explore the fears and uncertainties of graduating college and choosing a career path. In this episode, we'll hear from a University of Connecticut student who shares his struggles with post-graduation uncertainty and how he stays optimistic and hopeful. We'll also hear from someone who has embraced change, navigated various career paths, and found ways to adapt to life's evolving stages.
Narration 1, transition to interview one	I am on my way to meet Matt Corpuz, a senior at the University of Connecticut double majoring in Journalism and Communication. We'll discuss how he plans to balance his passion for both fields while navigating the fears and uncertainties of his final semester in college.

Narration 2, transition to interview two	I also had the pleasure of talking to Christina Kwarteng, a multifaceted individual, a wife, mom of three, minister, content creator/influencer and currently, a real estate agent but before she was all of this, she went to college to be a lawyer, then psychology and then ended up going to risk management and insurance before working full time as a content creator and now, a realtor, and who knows where else she might go, there is just no telling. In our conversation Christina talks about how she dealt with all the changes, her confidence in God and advice for any college student who is graduating, and may not necessarily know what route to go to.
